Applied Research in Economic Development (ARED) is an international journal of applied research in regional E.D. that strives to be readable and relevant for a broad audience.

As such, manuscripts should emphasize practical application, avoid jargon, and explain all concepts and terms clearly. Research of both qualitative and quantitative nature is encouraged, but all analysis should be presented in a clear and accessible manner.

Academic researchers may request a formal peer-reviewed review process for submitted manuscripts.

We accept literature reviews relevant to contemporary applied E.D., as well as papers related to teaching E.D. in academic or professional continuing education programs. We are also interested in reviews of books, websites, databases, and other resources of interest for E.D. practitioners, researchers, and students. In addition, we encourage case-studies-in-progress, concerning challenging real-world ED problems and projects.

All manuscripts should be original work, not previously published or currently under review elsewhere. Authors may consider, however, reworking previously published scientific or professional work for the more general readership of ARED.

We alternate themed and general topic issues. Future planned themes include E.D. and Alternative Energy, Transportation, and Entrepreneurship.

Accepted manuscripts will be published both in print and online editions. We strongly encourage authors to supplement their online manuscript with photographs, data sets, web links, and other creative materials.

Please submit manuscripts to Mark M. Miller, editor, via email attachment only: mmm4ed@gmail.com. Examples of past articles and full information for authors may be found at www.usm.edu/aredjournal, and complete guidelines may be found at www.usm.edu/aredjournal/guidelines. Please contact the editor for further information.
