

Article Review

Complete APA bibliographic reference:

Margolis, H. (2004). The consultant's corner: Struggling readers: What consultants need to know. Journal of Educational and Psychological Consultation, 15 (2), 191-204.

Three to five descriptor terms that best describe the topic:

Main: Struggling readers, reading, reading assessment, reading problems

Type of Article:

Other: Literature Review

Levels:

Lower Elementary (1-3), Upper Elementary (4-5), Middle School (6-8), High School (9-12)

Briefly stated major purpose(s) of the study:

This article explores what educational consultants need to realize about our students: "To help struggling readers' improve their reading, educational consultants must know a great deal about reading, reading assessment, and struggling readers" (191). This article based its findings on topics discussed by Lipson and Wixson's (2003) Assessment-Instruction Process, that presents recommendations for working with struggling reading and school personnel and suggesting how consultants might increase their working knowledge of reading and more importantly, struggling readers.

Research article – summarize the major findings in 1- 4 sentences:

The article promotes the idea that based on research findings, education consultants need to address the proper course when establishing programs that are intended to address struggling reading programs and plans.

| |
|--|
| |
|--|