About the Institute

The Institute for Disability Studies (IDS) at The University of Southern Mississippi has been committed to enhancing the lives of Mississippians with disabilities for the past 40 years. The Institute employs 32 professional staff and eight part-time support staff. Staff members represent the disciplines of special education, psychology, child development, social work, adult education, public health, rehabilitation counseling, nursing, law, communications, and other relevant disciplines.

During FY 2015, a total of 392 classroom students, graduate assistants and practicum students received short and intermediate-term training. Technical assistance was provided to 8,311 individuals, and 4,039 people participated in outreach training. Direct clinical services were provided to 257 clients and other direct services were provided to 2,209 clients. IDS’s 38 projects disseminated 168 new products developed in FY15 and continued to use more than 25 existing materials, including electronic products. Individual materials disseminated totaled more than 26,000 items.

The Institute for Disability Studies has four current emphasis areas: education and early intervention, housing, health and recreation, and employment.

In FY 2015, there were six projects in the emphasis area of early intervention and education. Throughout the year, Early Years Network: Children with Special Needs which is a part of the Early Years Network, Growing Mississippi’s Children, provided 621 technical assistance hours and made 359 technical assistance visits to licensed childcare centers throughout Mississippi. The Training, Resources, and Information for the Advancement of Disability (TRIAD) AmeriCorps project is an inclusive service program funded through the Mississippi Commission for Volunteer Service. This year, 33 young people with and without disabilities have served the community through TRIAD by working on training activities that help teach others to be financially responsible.

IDS’ health emphasis area was comprised of six projects. IDS served as evaluator for the Mississippi Division of Medicaid’s Money Follows the Person program, Bridge to Independence. The Family to Family Health Information, and Education Center focused on assisting families of children and youth with special health care needs. The Tobacco Control Strategies project focuses on gaining a better understanding of tobacco use among individuals with disabilities. In addition, the recreational programs offered at the IDS Gulf Park campus increased from three to six and individuals from the community actively participated in these recreational programs.

In FY15, there were 11 projects in the housing emphasis area, including Mississippi Home of Your Own project which has assisted Mississippians with disabilities and their families in becoming homeowners for more than 18 years.

The Mississippi Partnerships for Employment project for youth and young adults with ID/DD worked with partners, the Mississippi Council on Developmental Disabilities and Disability Rights Mississippi, to promote the employment of people with disabilities in Mississippi.
