Preparing for Final Exams

1. Create your own study guide
   Whether your professor has provided a study guide or not, consider creating your own to help you better understand the material and organize your notes. Outlining the important information will help frame it in your mind and refresh the material as you build the guide.

2. Ask questions
   Your instructors are there to help. If needed, ask them specific questions regarding the class material. If you are uncomfortable asking questions in front your class, consider staying after, emailing them or visiting them during their office hours.

3. Attend review sessions
   If your instructor offers a review session, be sure to attend, if possible. Often, review sessions offer an insight into the exam format and what class material is important to study.
4. Start early
Start reviewing and organizing for your final exams as soon as possible. If you avoid cramming and manage to review the information a little at a time each day prior to an exam, you will feel more prepared which will lessen any test anxiety you may have.

5. Organize a group study session
Sometimes it can be helpful to study in a group. If you feel a study group may be beneficial, please consider asking a friend in your class or posting a message on your class’s Canvas discussion board.

6. Take care of yourself
In the weeks leading up to finals, be sure to get a full night’s rest every night and eat healthy. Taking care of yourself will help you feel more relaxed.

7. Take breaks
To avoid feeling overwhelmed from a long study session, try to break it up into manageable sessions with rewards at the end to help keep you motivated and less stressed.
